

DSC's Environmental Policy

DSC seeks to conduct its business in an environmentally responsible manner, both in the advice it provides to clients and in its own operations.

The advice we provide to clients often relates to proposals or policies which will have major environmental impacts. In most cases, these are or will be the subject of detailed assessment by other specialists, whether within the studies to which we contribute, in parallel work or at another stage in the decision-making process. If we believe that environmental impacts are being overlooked we will point this out in the course of our work.

In our own operations we seek to apply the principles of “reduce, reuse, recycle” without compromising the quality of our work for clients and within our financial and practical constraints. These principles are reflected in other documents such as a travel and subsistence policy, and are taken into consideration in decisions on office location, purchase and operation of office equipment, purchase and use of office supplies, travel and other choices.
